The Fire Department of Paris.

The fire apparatus of Paris is in such a state of perfection as to be, in many respects, unrivalled in any city of the world. It is, indeed, to the credit of the French government and the city council of Paris that the fire department has been so well provided with instruments of fire-fighting.

The firemen are divided into different classes, each class having its own duties and its own apparatus. The firemen are divided into two classes: first, the regular firemen who are always on duty and always equipped for fire-fighting; and second, the auxiliary firemen who are called out only in case of emergency.

The firemen are well paid and well fed, and are considered to be among the best paid and best fed of any city in the world. They are well trained and well equipped, and are able to perform their duties with great efficiency.

The fire apparatus of Paris is very extensive and very efficient. There are many different kinds of apparatus, each designed for a particular purpose. The engines are divided into two classes: the engine pumps and the engine rollers.

The engine pumps are used for the purpose of firefighting and are equipped with a number of nozzles and jets. The engine rollers are used for the purpose of spreading the water and are equipped with a number of rollers.

The firemen are well trained and well equipped, and are able to perform their duties with great efficiency. They are considerate to the public and are always ready to assist in case of an emergency.

The fire department of Paris is well known for its efficiency and its rapidity in responding to an emergency.

The firemen are well trained and well equipped, and are able to perform their duties with great efficiency. They are considerate to the public and are always ready to assist in case of an emergency.

In conclusion, the fire department of Paris is well known for its efficiency and its rapidity in responding to an emergency. The firemen are well trained and well equipped, and are able to perform their duties with great efficiency. They are considerate to the public and are always ready to assist in case of an emergency.