Mr. Walworth, from the Watershed Committee:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen:

The subject is of such vital importance that I need not detain you with any elaborate introduction. The fact, however, is that our country is rapidly approaching a crisis in water supply. The population is increasing at an alarming rate, and we are facing a situation where the demand for water is outstripping the supply. This is not just a local issue; it is a national problem that requires immediate attention.

We have seen the effects of water shortages in various parts of the country, leading to industries shutting down and people going without essential services. It is imperative that we act now to ensure that our water resources are conserved and managed sustainably.

I urge all of you to consider the long-term implications of our actions today. Let us work together to find solutions that benefit not just us, but future generations as well. Thank you for your attention.

Yours sincerely,
