The Minority Report in the Upper House

The minority report in the Upper House, in opposition to the measure of the Committee on Water Works, submitted the following:

The minority report was prepared by Mr. Ogilvie and his friends, who strongly opposed the measure of the Committee on Water Works. They felt that the measure was fraught with danger, and that it would be injurious to the interests of the community. They were of the opinion that the measure was not necessary, and that it would be better to let the Committee on Water Works continue to work on its own.

Mr. Ogilvie, in his minority report, made the following points:

1. The Committee on Water Works was composed of men who were not qualified to take charge of such a measure. They were not acquainted with the laws of engineering and the proper way to carry on such work.

2. The Committee on Water Works was not in control of the money that was to be spent on the work. They had no power to make the necessary expenditures, and they were not in a position to control the men who were to do the work.

3. The Committee on Water Works was not in the best position to make the necessary investigations. They were not able to obtain the necessary information, and they were not able to make the necessary surveys.

4. The Committee on Water Works was not in the best position to make the necessary decisions. They were not able to make the necessary judgments, and they were not able to make the necessary decisions.

5. The Committee on Water Works was not in the best position to make the necessary reports. They were not able to make the necessary reports, and they were not able to make the necessary reports.

Mr. Ogilvie, in his minority report, stated that the measure of the Committee on Water Works was not necessary, and that it would be better to let the Committee on Water Works continue to work on its own.

The minority report was submitted to the Committee on Water Works, and the Committee on Water Works was asked to consider it.

The Committee on Water Works, after considering the minority report, decided to continue to work on its own, and to make the necessary investigations and decisions.

The minority report was submitted to the Committee on Water Works, and the Committee on Water Works was asked to consider it.

The Committee on Water Works, after considering the minority report, decided to continue to work on its own, and to make the necessary investigations and decisions.